

Beta Testing Questionnaire

CSD460: Capstone in Software Development

MoffatBay Lodge Project

Isaac Ellingson
Patrice Moracchini
Cannon Rivera
José Velázquez Sáenz

Test date:	2026/09/24
Team Member:	Isaac Ellingson
Tester:	Rachel Ellingson

Questions

Q: Were there any places on the website that were difficult to read? (Including reading text, or distinguishing icons, images, or UI elements from each other)

A: The calendar selection thing did what I wanted to do on the first click, though I wasn't sure if it was going to work like I wanted it to, by simply clicking the calendar and having it fill in the start date. Because I then moved my mouse left to consider the options, it showed a selection of the whole previous week which confused me for a few moments while I realized what it was doing. It might be easier if it refused to highlight end dates before the start date?

I also got a bit squeamish at the "Book Your Reservation" button, since it seemed very final and suggested that there wasn't going to be a "confirm" screen after it, even though I'm glad there was.

Q: For each of your own objectives that you had, interacting with the site, were there any moments where it was unclear how to get there from where you were?

A: I think it was pretty clear. The only thing was when the order was complete, the button to look up your reservation, I assumed would take me to a different view of my own reservation and instead took me to a blank lookup form.

Q: When entering data into the website, such as typing in text, or selecting items from a list or menu, did the website give you adequate feedback? Did it warn you or prevent you from entering bad data, and did it help you understand how to fix it?

A: I didn't get any invalid inputs in my pass through, and it seemed pretty clear what was supposed to go where. I might say, even though the pricing is visible on the booking page, it would feel better to have feedback on the form itself what the final price of the things I've selected would be, so I can see if there are any fees or anything included.

Q: From the perspective of a customer, do you feel like there was a lot of friction going from "I've never used this website before", to "I made a reservation"? Which part felt like the highest effort? Was that effort reasonable?

A: Most of my unease came from using an unfamiliar computer to do this test, so after adjusting to that, I think it was fine. I wanted to book a weekend getaway to touch grass and I did that.

Q: What are your feelings about the site's visual appearance? Did it communicate a theme that made sense for the business, and did you feel visual consistency between the pages?

A: I think the visual theme made sense. The only thing that threw me is that the pricing information on the booking form is just in the white space with no real formatting or colors or anything to set it apart.